The Bombay papers mention the transmission to England last mail, by letter-post, of the celebrated Sancy diamond, through Mssrs. Forbes & Co., of Bombay. Although the story of the Sancy diamond is not so remarkable as those of some other historic gems it is still sufficiently noteworthy. The diamond was found on the body of Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, after his defeat in 1476, by the Swiss. It was purchased in 1479 by the King of Portugal and ten years later it was sold by him to Nicholas de Bailey, Baron de Sancy, from whom it derives its name. The Baron de Sancy sent it as a present to the King of France, and the servant who had charge of the gift, being attacked by robbers, proved himself equal to the occasion, and swallowed the diamond. We must assume that his death speedily followed on this act of devotion, for according to the story, the stone was found in his body. It afterwards came into the possession of James II of England, by whom it was sold for £25,000 to Louis XIV. During the French Revolution, the Sancy diamond disappeared, but was afterwards recovered and purchased by Napoleon I., by whom it was afterwards sold to Prince Paul Demidoff. It is valued at from £20,000 to £30,000, is pear shaped, and weighs 53 1/2 carats. – Pall Mall Gazette.
